SIERRA VISTA — As long as newspapers publish inaccurate information, inconvenient truths about lawmakers, there will be schemes and legislation aimed against press freedoms and government transparency.

“In Arizona, not one legislative session has passed in the last 20 years without at least one bill being introduced to limit press freedoms, government access and curtail newspaper publication of public notices,” said Manuel C. Coppola who was named on Monday as director of legislative affairs for Wick Communications Co.

“Arizona is not alone,” he said. “In July, North Carolina, another one of our Wick markets, Gov. Roy Cooper vetoed a bill that would have allowed the posting of public notices electronically instead of in printed newspapers. Tucked into a bill with legislation that the governor did support, it was a backdoor way through the legislature but ultimately mixed by a man who understands the value of our watchdog role and the need permanently preserve public records in an unalterable print state.”

In nixing the bill, Cooper said, “This legislation is another example of that misguided philosophy meant to specifically threaten and harm the media. Legislation that enacts retribution on the media threatens a free and democratic society.”

Greyhound owners bring their dogs to town for adoption events and answer questions about the dogs as do household pets and small animals. Prospective adopters are invited to meet the dogs as they walk throughout the store or lounge on blankets while they bond on blankets.

The five-day camp offered classes to high school students and their teachers in the field of cybersecurity. The weeklong camp, which included hands-on workshop was funded by grants from the University of Arizona. “This is a really good computer science camp. The students and teachers all had the opportunity to work with new technology and explore the field of cybersecurity,” said Cutler, who talked to GenCyber campers at the Sierra Vista High School campus of the University of Arizona.

“The camps are extremely useful, just in these early days of cybersecurity,” she said. “They help bring the very real need for cybersecurity to the attention of students and parents. Cybersecurity is important where there are lots of applications and opportunities.”
